Selected Tale. HAMILTON KIRK'S CHOICE.

BY AN OLD CONTRIBUTOR.

Ir was a dream; yet one so vivid, that now, as I recall it, it has to my mind the distinctness of a vision. I seemed to be lifted into mid-air. Beneath me rolled a boundless ocean; far away, on either side, stretched a vast misty continent, and the best means of knowing. Some shallowbrained men, who had wasted all their habitants, and seemed full of hurry, discord and money, and then gone to him to borrow confusion; I saw that this island was united by more, said he was a 'regular old Fudge; a bridge to each of the neighboring continents.— more, said he was a regular old Fudge;
These bridges were very much frequented; nor but the poor and needy in the neighbor-

These bridges were very much frequented; nor did I wonder at it; for while the island itself was dull, noisy, and common-place enough, the roads leading from it were of exceeding beauty, tranquility and brightness. Yet the roads differed much in their appearance. One was festeoned and carpeted with the freshest verdure, the gayest flowers of Spring, bright, and with the rosy light of morning. The other, adorned with the rich spoils of the Autumn forests, seemed bathed in a mellow, sunset glory. The greater number of the travellers on the former road were in the first flush of youth. They were clapping their lands for very joy, and stopping here and who could love him, he married her, and who could love him, he married her, and their hands for very joy, and stopping here and there to erown themselves with the flowers upon the wayside, yet with eyes ever fixed, in joyous settled down. He built him a spacious cxpectation, on the dim land. Some older ones there were, who mingled with this gay young throng, but their brows were not so free from anxiety and care. Sometimes they paused, hesitated, and looked back, and their step had not the buoyant confidence which characterized that of their fellow travellers. These, on the contrary, who had chosen the other road, were generally aomewhat advanced in years; but if they felt less excitement, they seemed to experience no ones handsome house, and laid out his grounds felt less excitement, they seemed to experience no ter to his care and protection. It is true that eyes smiling through tears were fixed upon the far-off shore, but tears no less than smiles seemed born of a pensive pleasure. I saw, too, many travellers on each road whose faces were turned homeward.— and all his love was bestowed upon it, Few of those on the children's bridge came back rejoicing as they had gone—most wore a saddened and thus kept active. Many believe that the natives of China, as their powers exhausted in simply learning to read such a language, without any opportunity (if capable) of suggesting and introducing any improvements. All this may be true of the Chinese in peace. But war, though carried on by artificial means, is to be classed as the natural language of the world, and as such all nations mem ready enough to make it universal. And though never engaging in foreign battles for quarrels between the clans, like our theological controversies and political campaigns, which they generally settle by force of arms. With the Tartars and neighboring States they have numbers they can muster, and the resources ther have on hand, it may not be so easy a fulmatter, after all, to overturn the foundation of the Celestial Empire.

That the population has been exaggerated by the manner in which their census is taken, there can be little doubt, but upon a moderate estigate the Empire may include more than oneburth of the population of the whole world .-Deir physical force is therefore so great, that less of large armies might not sensibly broken their power of resistance. They migh be able to prolong the war for many years, and I they should, who can tell whether they would not in the meantime make such progress in the sience of destruction, as eventually to expel heir invaders. The fashion has been for many to underrate the Chinese in many repects they have been. Desolation may be apread wough certain districts, and the land may be repeked in the blood of the people; but if here is any protection in a just cause for husanity, all this may turn to little account in Farm for Sale.

The reason why, is that by nature's own process it restores the heirs of William Bateman, dec., situated in Portsmouth adjoining the Glen. There is about one mile of shore privilege, with wharf and the whole farm contains about 200 acres of excellent farm contains about 200 acres of excellent farm in a state of good cultivation, also has a thrifty orchard which will yield the present season about 1000 bushels of apples. The House and barn have but recently been built, with all the modern improvements.

This offers one of the finest opportunities for person wishing a country seat on the Island, as fine view is presented of the East Bay and Ocean. Seaconnet Point being but a few miles distant.
